Daring to DREAM with books

Local entities team up with Mazza Museum to put inclusive books in schools

By Jeannie Wiley Wolf
The Courier

The University of Findlay's Mazza Museum is teaming up with the College of Education and other community partners to launch a new program called DREAM — Disability Representation, Education and Awareness in Media.

The goal is to increase awareness of literature that focuses on, includes and/or is created by people with disabilities.

A set of 14 different titles will be placed in elementary schools in Findlay and Hancock County as well as the Findlay-Hancock County Public Library and the Mazza library and gift shop where copies will be available for purchase, said Ben Sapp, director of the Mazza Museum.

“The books cover everything from physical disabilities to being autistic to visually impaired and hearing impaired. Many different types of disabilities are reflected in these books,” he said. “That’s kind of the idea, that the books would reflect students that these schools would be interacting and working with on a daily basis.”

Mazza was recently awarded a $2,420 grant from the Findlay-Hancock

“The Community Foundation, they were very supportive and we’re grateful for their generous donation. Really truly the real expense was just the books and a lot of time that different individuals have given to make this happen,” he said.

Rosemary Well's original “Max and Ruby” illustration and the final book illustration in “Max Cleans Up” are seen here at the Mazza Museum on the campus of the University of Findlay. (LEAH ALSEPT/The Courier)

Mazza Museum offers a variety of displays and activities for children. Below are just a few examples.

This mixed media sculpture of a Grindylow, a creature from English and Celtic mythology, was one of 24 pieces on display in the University of Findlay Mazza Museum's Enchanted Brush exhibit last year. The exhibition is an annual summer show that features works by artists from around the world. (KEVIN BEAN/The Courier)

Sapp said the Toledo Public Library introduced the program a few years ago.

“Then it was brought to our attention and we felt like it was important to try and implement it in the Hancock County/Findlay City schools,” said Sapp.

The first collection of books is aimed at the elementary school age level, he noted.

“My hope would be somewhere down the road we could do the same with young adults and novels and just help to carry that theme through all the grades and help individuals to be more aware, more respectful and helpful of each other,” explained Sapp.

He said individuals from Blanchard Valley School helped pick the books.

“I think we had maybe 30 different titles. They felt like these 14 really reflected them individually and some of the daily challenges they face,” said Sapp.

They also worked together to try and get the books at a discounted rate from the publishers. In all, 950 books will be dispersed.

Sapp noted that some graduate students enrolled in UF's college of education will write lesson plans to go with the books. “And the great thing is that each year there will be new books that are released. This collection of books will continue to grow,” he said. “And hopefully the Community Foundation might see the benefit of this program and continue to help support the purchasing of those books.”

They're also hoping that the graduate students will continue to write lesson plans and find ways to use these books in the classrooms, he said. The plan is to have the books and lesson plans distributed by the end of the school year so librarians and teachers can begin preparing for next year. The public library also hopes to incorporate some of the books in its SummerRead program.

“So it kind of gets the awareness and the exposure of these titles out early before the school year starts in the fall,” said Sapp.

“You never know the doors that this may open,” he added. “I think of having some illustrators and authors of some of these books possibly coming over the next several years to do school visits and talks here at conferences for teachers and librarians. I think there are a lot of opportunities from this foundation that we're starting through the help of what's been done in Toledo.”

Sapp said he would also like to see original illustrations from some of the books become a part of the Mazza Museum - the world's largest collection of original artwork by children's book illustrators.

“It's just I think a wonderful use of resources in our community,” he said.

Featured books will include: “All the Way to the Top: How One Girl's Fight for Americans with Disabilities Changed Everything” by Annette Bay Pimentel; “Awesomely Emma: A Charley and Emma Story” by Amy Webb; “Benji, the Bad Day, and Me” by Sally J. Pla; “Brilliant Bea: A Story for Kids with Dyslexia and Learning Differences” by Mary Vukadinovich and Shaina Rudolph; “Dancing with Daddy” by Anitra Rowe Schulte; “A Friend for Henry” by Jenn Bailey; “I Don't Like Birthday Parties” by Maureen Gaspari; “I Will Dance” by Nancy Bo Flood; “Just Ask! Be Different, Be Brave, Be You” by Sonia Sotomayor; “Mighty Mila” by Katie Petruzzello; “My Three Best Friends and Me, Zulay” by Cari Best; “A Sky-Blue Bench” by Bahram Rahman; and “When Charley Met Emma” by Amy Webb.
